

Relay pilot: Monday launch and team checklist

From: Priya Shah <priya@northbank.example>
To: Product and Engineering <team@northbank.example>
Date: Tuesday, 19 October 2021, 09:10

Hi team,

We are opening the Relay pilot next Monday, after six months of testing with teams working across home and office. The first release brings project updates, decisions and handover notes into one shared workspace. It is designed to replace the status meetings that have quietly filled our calendars since last year.

The pilot will include twelve customer teams, each with a named contact from product and support. Invitations will go out on Monday morning, and every account will start with a short onboarding checklist. Please keep the launch quiet until those teams have confirmed they can sign in and create their first project.

We are deliberately leaving calendar sync and the mobile app out of this release. The current build supports browser access, email summaries and a simple export for teams that want a local record. If a customer asks for anything outside that scope, record it in the shared feedback board before making a commitment.

By Thursday afternoon, please check the permissions, help articles and contact details for the accounts you own. We will review the first week of usage on Friday, 29 October, and decide whether to expand the pilot. Bring one example of something that worked and one thing that made the experience harder than it needed to be.

Thanks,
Priya

Relay pilot: Monday launch and team checklist

From: Priya Shah <priya@northbank.example>
To: Product and Engineering <team@northbank.example>
Date: Tuesday, 19 October 2021, 09:10

Hi team,

We are opening the Relay pilot next Monday, after six months of testing with teams working across home and office. The first release brings project updates, decisions and handover notes into one shared workspace. It is designed to replace the status meetings that have quietly filled our calendars since last year.

The pilot will include twelve customer teams, each with a named contact from product and support. Invitations will go out on Monday morning, and every account will start with a short onboarding checklist. Please keep the launch quiet until those teams have confirmed they can sign in and create their first project.

We are deliberately leaving calendar sync and the mobile app out of this release. The current build supports browser access, email summaries and a simple export for teams that want a local record. If a customer asks for anything outside that scope, record it in the shared feedback board before making a commitment.

By Thursday afternoon, please check the permissions, help articles and contact details for the accounts you own. We will review the first week of usage on Friday, 29 October, and decide whether to expand the pilot. Bring one example of something that worked and one thing that made the experience harder than it needed to be.

Thanks,
Priya

Relay pilot: Monday launch and team checklist

From: Priya Shah <priya@northbank.example>
To: Product and Engineering <team@northbank.example>
Date: Tuesday, 19 October 2021, 09:10

Hi team,

We are opening the Relay pilot next Monday, after six months of testing with teams working across home and office. The first release brings project updates, decisions and handover notes into one shared workspace. It is designed to replace the status meetings that have quietly filled our calendars since last year.

The pilot will include twelve customer teams, each with a named contact from product and support. Invitations will go out on Monday morning, and every account will start with a short onboarding checklist. Please keep the launch quiet until those teams have confirmed they can sign in and create their first project.

We are deliberately leaving calendar sync and the mobile app out of this release. The current build supports browser access, email summaries and a simple export for teams that want a local record. If a customer asks for anything outside that scope, record it in the shared feedback board before making a commitment.

By Thursday afternoon, please check the permissions, help articles and contact details for the accounts you own. We will review the first week of usage on Friday, 29 October, and decide whether to expand the pilot. Bring one example of something that worked and one thing that made the experience harder than it needed to be.

Thanks,
Priya

Relay pilot: Monday launch and team checklist

From: Priya Shah <priya@northbank.example>
To: Product and Engineering <team@northbank.example>
Date: Tuesday, 19 October 2021, 09:10

Hi team,

We are opening the Relay pilot next Monday, after six months of testing with teams working across home and office. The first release brings project updates, decisions and handover notes into one shared workspace. It is designed to replace the status meetings that have quietly filled our calendars since last year.

The pilot will include twelve customer teams, each with a named contact from product and support. Invitations will go out on Monday morning, and every account will start with a short onboarding checklist. Please keep the launch quiet until those teams have confirmed they can sign in and create their first project.

We are deliberately leaving calendar sync and the mobile app out of this release. The current build supports browser access, email summaries and a simple export for teams that want a local record. If a customer asks for anything outside that scope, record it in the shared feedback board before making a commitment.

By Thursday afternoon, please check the permissions, help articles and contact details for the accounts you own. We will review the first week of usage on Friday, 29 October, and decide whether to expand the pilot. Bring one example of something that worked and one thing that made the experience harder than it needed to be.

Thanks,
Priya